Discovery Health’s popular show MYSTERY DIAGNOSIS will spotlight an Acoustic Neuroma patient this March. As part of the hit series’ eighth season, Teresa Zdansky will share her riveting story with audiences across the nation. Zdansky’s show, premiering on Monday, March 8, at 10 PM ET/PT, will take you on a roller coaster ride of emotions as Teresa endures misdiagnoses and dismissals before ever finding a solution.

In 2005, Teresa Zdansky was working as a financial analyst in San Antonio, married and mother to one son from a previous relationship. Eager to expand their family, Teresa and her husband Frank were thrilled to learn that she was pregnant—but that excitement is soon dashed when two months into her pregnancy, Teresa is unable to feel the right side of her face. Alarmed, Teresa visits her physician who informs her that the numbing sensation is a result of Pregnancy Rhinitis, a condition that could last the entire pregnancy. Shaken by the news, Teresa and her family try to keep their hopes high and for the next few months, she focuses on preparing for her new baby. But seven months into her pregnancy, Teresa is struck with a new symptom causing her a tingling sensation all down the left side of her body. Fearing for the health of her unborn child, doctors reassure Teresa that the baby is in excellent health—but just days before her baby is due, she begins to suffer from debilitating migraine headaches. The migraines continue through the birth of her baby girl, Kendra, threatening to overshadow their happiness.

During a post-birth trip to her obstetrician, Teresa learns that these symptoms are not a result of her pregnancy—and at the recommendation of her doctor, she makes an appointment with a neurologist. Following a series of tests, to the neurologist and his team are finally able to give Teresa and her family the answer they have been looking for. Teresa learns that her symptoms were the result of an Acoustic Neuroma, a non-cancerous tumor that grows out of specialized nerve cells. Since undergoing surgery to remove the mass, Teresa has made tremendous progress and is working to help support others who suffer from Acoustic Neuromas.

Discovery Health’s award-winning MYSTERY DIAGNOSIS chronicles the experiences of patients who suffer from conditions outside of the medical mainstream. Each episode features patients who are initially misdiagnosed or undiagnosed altogether due to the uncommon nature of their symptoms and general lack of awareness regarding their conditions. This popular series—now in its eighth season on Discovery Health—profiles the strength and courage of heroic patients and determined medical practitioners as they struggle to make sense of baffling conditions.
